

The Air Force Information Technology & Cyberpower Conference • 29–31 August 2016

The Air Force Information Technology & Cyberpower Conference is bringing together Air Force IT experts, prominent IT academics, and America's best cybersecurity vendors for three days of exhibits, speakers, education, and discussion regarding the ways we can better proactively lead America's defense from cyber attacks and advanced persistent threats in an increasingly digital world. This year's theme is America: Living Free, Secure, and Productive in a Cyber World. The event will be held at the Renaissance Montgomery Hotel & Spa at the Convention Center, 29–31 August 2016.

Foreign governments, hackers, terrorists, decentralized threats, and others have never presented a greater risk to the wellbeing of the United States and the cybersecurity of corporations and private individuals. Everything from financial records and personally identifiable information to vital infrastructure and strategic information critical to the safety and security of the United States face a litany of ever-evolving threats.

In 2015, the US Office of Personnel Management (OPM) was hit with one of the worst data breaches in history, exposing not only personal data but also the security clearance information of nearly 22 million people. Under-scoring this was a time lapse of nearly a year from the time of the initial breach until its detection. It is at this juncture that the AFITC reemerges to again bring together the best and brightest in the public and private sectors.

From former and current personnel who shape the conversation about IT/cybersecurity to the private industry leaders developing new and innovative solutions to the problems of today and tomorrow, no other event gives you such high-level access to both ends of this spectrum. If you have cyber or cutting-edge IT solutions to offer, you need to be at AFITC.
